was officiated by a Rabbi. So the structure where the ceremony took place resembled a chuppah yet could be seen as a mundap (Alisha's Nika took place days before) as well! Partyland Flowers really made this chic chocolate and white structure come to life w/ the rich floral chandelier! The 4ft tall trees that lined the aisle stood on clear acrylic pedestals and were stunning in gorgeous shades of purple, red, green and pinks. Not to mention they were dripping w/ crystals. The ceremony space was also the reception space and went through a quick 60-minute transformation. When the guests returned to the ballroom they were welcomed by vibrant centerpieces, that were softened w/ coral linen and mocha colored napkin. The bride and groom opted for table names over the tradition numbers. So the tables were named after their fav DC spots and places they as a couple have traveled. Working Brides graphics department worked w/ the couple on creating very elegant yet simple menu and table names. The ceremony structure also took on a new life and became the showpiece for the lovely cake that Mayflower Hotels Bakery created for the couple. This really spotlighted the cake and gave the bride and groom a place to come for toasts yet they were able to enjoy their dinner at a family table.

After dinner the party really got started once DJ Mike got to spinning today's hits. At one point one of the DJ assistants came out dressed like Michael Jackson and did a brief tribute to the King of Pop!! The bride and groom had a blast dancing the rest of the night away!!

ALISHA BHAGAT &amp; MARK EGERMAN

Alisha & Mark are two Ivy League Graduates that come from two very different religious backgrounds. Alisha is Muslim and Mark is Jewish, yet that couldn't stop the attraction and the love that brought them together. They began planning their wedding just about a year out. With Mark wrapping up Law School at Harvard, Alisha and Working Brides hit the ground running. Time was of the essence since Alisha would soon be leaving to study Urdu in Lucknow, India. Wrapping up the two venues and getting a fantastic photographer were top priority. Quick to follow were the big decisions on the décor.

The Mendhi that took place outdoors at the Dumbarton House in Georgetown was to be festive and full of color!! So with a bit of a vision on color and a Moroccan theme, Alisha and Working Brides went to Sachi Sood of Partyland Flowers and she created the most gorgeous Moroccan tent for lounging and mendhi. The fabrics and bold colors proved to be exciting for guests and a great place to relax as the night winded down.

Alisha & Mark wanted the actual wedding day to be very clean cut. Bringing the two religious backgrounds into the ceremony yet not favoring one over the other was the goal. Mark donned a yamaka and Alisha a gorgeous Sari. The ceremony
